Will 2015 be the year that altered the course of golf history?

The 2015 golf season might very well be remembered as the year of the official changing of the guard

The 2015 golf season might very well be remembered as the year of the official changing of the guard, when Jordan Spieth made a valiant run at the Grand Slam, Jason Day claimed his first major championship and Rickie Fowler notched that breakthrough win in dramatic fashion via a playoff at the Players Championship. And don't forget about Rory McIlroy, who, although he was sidelined for some of the summer, still managed to get four worldwide victories during the year. So as the year winds down, we revisit those historic victories through the stories told when they happened.

The Masters, April 9-12

Winner:

Jordan Spieth

Course:

Augusta National Golf Club in Augusta, Georgia

How he did it:

The then-21-year-old Texan shook off his second-place finish at the previous year's Masters to become the second-youngest winner of the green jacket.

The U.S. Open, June 18-21

Winner:

Jordan Spieth

Course:

Chambers Bay Golf Club in University Place, Washington

How he did it:

A birdie on the 72nd hole

figured to get Spieth into a playoff, but when Dustin Johnson three-putted for par, Spieth claimed his second straight major title.

The Open Championship, July 16-20

Winner:

Zach Johnson

Course:

St. Andrews, Old Course, in Fife, Scotland

How he did it:

Johnson, who also won the 2007 Masters, held off Louis Oosthuizen and Marc Leishman in a playoff at the Home of Golf. Spieth, looking for a third major win in a row, finished a shot out of the playoff that produced only the second Monday finish in the tournament's long history.

The PGA Championship, Aug. 13-16

Winner:

Jason Day

Course:

Whistling Straits in Haven, Wisconsin

How he did it:

The emotional Day kept Spieth at bay, finishing the year's final major at a whopping 20 under par.
